Common European Framework of References for Languages

Created by the European Council (2001), the Common European Framework of References for Languages defines 6 levels of linguistic aptitude which a group of educational institutes, under the banner of ALTE (Association of Language Testers in Europe), have used to create examinations allowing the evaluation and certification, with an official diploma, of linguistic skills. These language achievements can then be efficiently compared and recognized by not only educational institutes but also, more and more, by different administrations and companies.
